A tiny tarsier called Timi made his home in Bohol's lush forest.
His body was tiny because it was smaller than a coconut but he possessed large eyes and even larger ears.
Timi stayed awake at night and from his branch he would announce.
"I can hear everything! I'm the forest's best protector!"
The owls blinked. The bats yawned. The civet cats just rolled over.

During one night Timi picked up a soft rustling sound coming from the trees.
"Danger!" he squeaked.
Timi moved between branches in a series of hops which disturbed all the sleeping animals.
The animals quickly gathered with intentions to escape when they realized their threat was only a falling banana leaf.
a banana leaf falling to the ground.
The old owl sighed. "Timi, you need to be more careful."

A loud crunch reached Timi's ears during the following night.
He paused.
He moved silently towards the owl and civet cat instead of heading to yell.
Together, they followed the sound.
A wild boar approached the baby birds' nest as it sniffed around.
The animals united to drive it away without causing harm.
Timi's large ears helped but it was teamwork that saved the day.

Timi continued his nighttime vigil with his large eyes and ears.
Timi no longer attempted to guard the forest by himself.
He joined forces with the owls and bats alongside other creatures.
Timi discovered true protection extends beyond noise.
it means listening, thinking, and working together.
